The IVMF delivers class-leading programs in career, vocational, and entrepreneurship training, providing service members, veterans and military spouses the knowledge, connections, and experience they need to navigate the gap between their military lives and the civilian world and workplace. We share access to programs, resources, and partnerships to help transform lives and help them achieve their goals after service.

The D'Aniello Institute also consults with and advises service organizations across the country on better ways to coordinate care that serves the needs of veterans and the military family community.

And the IVMF delivers research, evaluation, policy insights, and quality improvement results in a data-informed approach to address evolving challenges to support veterans and their families through collaboration with government, industry, and community partners nationwide. Action-oriented and solution-focused, the IVMF empowers partners to measure, improve, and communicate the impact of veteran and military family initiatives.
